THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESSMEN.

President Harrison has appointed Dr. Wilcox to be internal revenue collector of the Springfield district in spite of the protests of the Illinois senators. This is regarded as a test case as showing how much influence congressmen or senators have with the present administration, and consequently Senators Calhoun and Farwell are vexed and disappointed over the result in the Springfield collectorship case.

It seems that President Harrison proposes to do all the appointing himself. He will not allow any one to act as president for him. In a dispatch from Washington this paragraph is found:—

President Harrison is being held personally responsible for all the appointments, whether he is in fact responsible or not. Next, he called in the state legislature to officially nominate him to the president.

It is the practice of his party to make recommendations for the appointment in every state where there is a contest involving more than one prominent and deserving republican. The papers are all biased and referred in a bundle to the president, who personally goes over them and selects the one he believes should receive the preference. In nine cases out of ten a "dark horse" is selected where there is a spirited contest. This is done for the purpose of keeping down all appearances of desiring to recognize any faction in the party. Mr. Blaine, for instance, a member of times that while he has recommended appointments he never knows till the announcement is made from the white house, who will be appointed. The president thus assumes the responsibility in each individual case, and the cabinet officers are relieved.

Mr. Hayes once took upon himself the identical work which President Harrison now seeks to do, and no doubt he remembers it with regret to this day. He soon found out that he could not become personally acquainted with every individual case; and if President Harrison thinks he can attend to appointments without the aid of congressmen or senators he will learn that the work is more than he can do. The president of the United States does not surrender prerogative when he reposes trust and confidence in a congressman or a senator by taking his advice in regard to an appointment. As a rule, the congressman or the senator knows all about the merits of any particular case, and is therefore the best judge as to who shall be appointed. There was a good deal of sound sense as well as humor in the reply of Lincoln to the Iowa delegation. The congressmen and the senators were united on a good man for a responsible office, while he was opposed by a delegation of citizens. Mr. Lincoln decided to appoint the man recommended by the congressmen, which brought from the delegation the question: "But Mr. President, who is president, you or congressmen?" Mr. Lincoln smiled and replied: "In cases about which I really know nothing, and cannot decide because of conflicting testimony, the congressmen must act as president."

It is utterly impossible for President Harrison or any other president to thoroughly and satisfactorily understand the merits of all cases of appointments brought before him. There are nearly ten thousand offices to be filled with presidential appointees. How can he thoroughly inquire into the relative merits of the candidates for the same office when he is far removed from the scene of the contest and knows nothing whatever in regard to the candidates? The president must be guided in his judgment by some one familiar with the candidates and the situation, and no one is better qualified to do than either a congressman or a senator. Those who uphold the president in his scheme to run the machine without the advice of congressmen or senators, make the charges that the senators have altogether too exalted an idea of "senatorial courtesy." But that charge is foolish. The recommendations of senators, in the Springfield case, for instance, was one of fairness and business common sense.

The boast that President Harrison has "not consulted politicians very much" in making appointments, is an idle one, and reflects no credit on the men who make it or on the president himself. There is trouble ahead in such a course as that marked out by Harrison. It is too big a job for him. Every president that has tried it has failed. It is not business. It is neither fair nor practical.

NO EXTRA SESSION.

Governor Hoard to day decided, after consultation with gentlemen eminent in the legal profession, that he would not call an extra session of the legislature. It is the opinion of the gentlemen, who have consulted the legal decisions and authorities, that the rape law of '89, read literally, leads to an absurdity, and that the laws existing prior to that enactment remain in force, except as to the change in the age of consent and penalty which was clearly the intention of the legislature to be printed in the law. The insertion of the word "under" in place of "more" was clearly a clerical error. An examination of the bill as reported by the judiciary committee of the senate shows that the word "more" was written in ink; that some clerk, doubting the wisdom of the committee, drew a pencil mark over the word and wrote above it in pencil the word "under." It is thought that there can be no doubt that the courts will hold that the rape law of 1889 is of no effect, except that portion relating to age and the portion relating to the penalty. Governor Hoard bases his decision in the matter of calling an extra session on the opinions of Hon. S. U. Pinney, Hon. I. C. Sloan, dean of the Wisconsin university law school, and the attorney general and his assistant.

It is said the reasons of the legislature for lowering the age of consent from 14 years to 12 and reducing the penalty was that cases had arisen in the state where juries had refused to convict owing to the fact of the previous unchaste character of the female, even at 14 years of age. The juries refused to inflict the manifest injustice of imprisonment for life under such circumstances, and so would not convict at all. For this reason it was thought best by the legislature to fix the age and penalty within a reasonable limit. —Madison Journal.

AFFAIRS ACROSS THE SEA.

A DAY'S HAPPENINGS IN FOREIGN LANDS.Editor O'Brien Testifies Further in the Farnell Investigation—Donovan
Wins at Newmarket.London, May 23.—William O'Brien commenced his testimony before the Farnell commission.He denied that he has ever published in United Ireland articles inciting people to outrage. The league, he said, was founded chiefly to oppose secret landlord combinations.The landlords had formed a society
having a nominal capital of 1,000,000 pounds, for the purpose of carrying out such evictions and reducing the value of tenants by colonies of tenants from other countries.The witness had been a member of the committee of the league since its organization and had never heard a suggestion which encouraged outrage. Several branches of the league had been suppressed in consequence of the strong language used at the meetings and the excessive boycotting to which they resorted. The witness attested the convention of the league in 1886. He had no connection with the dynamiters while there. A vast bulk of those who attended the convention were men of the highest standing.The cross-examination of Mr. O'Brien was conducted by Attorney-General Webster.
The witness said that he could not produce any record which showed that the league suppressed branches or persecuted any branch.The witness said that he did not see laying down unconstitutional.The witness had been a member of the

MUD-PAVED ROADS NO GOOD.

So the Janesville People Are Beginning To Learn by Sad Experience.

Why Not Macadamize the Principal Streets? It Could Be Cheaply Done.

"Scrape what gathers in the gutters into a long mushy lump along the center of the street. When it washes down scrape it up again. Nice system for the streets of a city like Janesville, isn't it?"

The speaker was Alderman J. P. Baker, and there was fire in his eye. He was not moved by a desire to reflect upon any particular person for the system he complained of dates back past the term of authority of any one man or any body of men. But he was thoroughly in earnest, beyond a doubt.

"The city keeps on" he said, "covering its streets with what is called gravel. The cost is thirty-five or forty cents a load; and what do we get? Half of each load is sand; and you might as well put sand on a street and be done with it as to put sand. Then there is at least a quarter of the load big cobblestones that it costs fifteen or twenty cents a load to have raked off. The quarter of a load that is left has cost by this time sixty cents. It is mixed in with washings from the gutter and is as fast as the mud washes down again it is scraped back. This has been the history of Janesville road-making from the first.

"Now the best change the city can make is to buy a stone crusher, lease a section of a quarry and cover the streets with crushed stone. Stone of good quality, not the rotten shale that breaks in your fingers, can be put on for fifty cents a load. When this stone is evenly spread nothing more is needed. Whatever washed down into the gutter should be carried away. Spreading it on again with the road scraper is a waste of time and money. All the streets for a fair distance on each side of the business streets should be fixed this way, and stone should be spread on Main and Jackson streets for the full length. The experiment will be tried on Jackson street right away, although when the stone is broken by hand the expense is considerably greater. Little towns all over the west are making use of power crushers.

St. Charles, Iowa, has its principal streets dug out two feet, filled up part way with large stones, and then topped off with the smaller. Janesville's drainage would make this unnecessary, but the top dressing could be used with good advantage."
